Appearing at:

As an award-winning legal worker with the National Lawyers Guild and a member of multiple radical law collectives, Kris Hermes will discuss how repressive policing developed during the 2000 Republican convention protests are still used across the U.S. today. Drawing on his experience, Hermes will also discuss ways in which activists can employ radical, innovative and confrontational forms of resistance to the legal system. Hermes has written extensively and has spoken at numerous community meetings, political conferences, and book fairs on these and other issues. crashingthepartythebook.com
